

Country Lawyer

This column is in tribute to the Virginia State Police. I have had high regard for the conduct of the State Police in recent years and an incident of last week confirmed and enhanced that regard.

As Commonwealth's Attorney of my county I have, of necessity, had close association with the State Police. Every arrest that they make within the county that has serious aspects must be prosecuted by me. When serious crime occurs and skilled detective work is involved we call upon the State Police. The Investigator who usually responds, Mr. L. B. Marston, is probably one of the best detectives in the United States. He has worked with us not only with a high degree of skill but also in splendid cooperation.

Last week a severe test came. A phone call notified me that there had been murder. I called the Sheriff who was immediately available and we sped to the scene picking up the locally assigned Trooper on the way. We found the keeper of a small country store had been brutally beaten to death beside his counter and the place was a shambles. It was clearly a situation that merited the best and most skilled detective work. The Trooper was asked to call his office and request Investigators. This he did by radio from his car and in two minutes we were assured Investigators would be sent.

As we awaited the Investigators other Troopers arrived. These and County Officers went hither and yon investigating tips. By the time the Investigator had arrived, photographed everything essential and had picked up essential evidence and released the body for removal other workers had centralized suspicion upon one young man. This quickly became sufficiently strong to warrant discarding all other clues and to concentrate on this one suspect.

Cars sped here and there collecting information wherever possible and always reporting by radio. Thus the occupants of each car had the advantage of knowing immediately of each scrap of helpful information. Soon it became clear that the suspect was in a car some place within a four-county area. The number and description of the car was known.

For the next three hours search of the four counties went on. Police cars were here and there and everywhere always searching and always reporting so that the progress and location of each car was always known and there was no duplication. I rode in one car with one of the Troopers. At one point we suspected the possibility of the wanted car being out of sight behind a house. When we drove into that yard and the Trooper stepped out of the car he was greeted with the threat that if he advanced one step further he would be met with a shot gun blast.

This threatening voice became a friendly voice as soon as identity was made known. We left this scene chuckling. Finally we received a tip that the suspect had an aunt in an adjoining county. As we sped there we radioed other cars and it was agreed to meet there but with each car coming by different routes.

Our car reached the meeting place first. We stopped and cut off the lights. A few seconds later the hunted car passed. We immediately pursued and called the other cars. Quickly the wanted car was stopped. Like a flash the Trooper was out of his car and had checked the occupants of the suspected car for weapons. A few seconds later the other police cars were at the scene. The suspect was in custody.

During those hours of the intense hunt the people, except in a small area, knew nothing of it. Asleep in their homes along the normally peaceful and quiet countryside they were unaware of the hot man-hunt going on. They knew not that trained, highly efficient and well organized State Police, in cooperation with local officers, were combing the countryside intent on getting a killer out of circulation.

As it turned out the killer was in custody within nine hours after the crime. Within 48 hours he tearfully burst forth with a complete confession to the officer. From the initial attitude of bravado and denial his conscience had brought him to regret and remorse and desire to open up his heart in confession. Within 72 hours after commission of the crime a Grand Jury indictment had been returned and the matter was ready for trial.

All of this was made possible through the splendid cooperation of the Virginia State Police with the local officers. It permitted almost immediate restoration of a sense of safety and security of the people. Left alone the county officers would have been greatly handicapped and there would have been much greater delay. We can well say that we are grateful to and for the State Police and that as a body it is deserving of tribute.

cook electrically and be sure

You take a guess every time you turn up a flame. It can be too high or too low ... you're never really sure. Not so with electric cooking.

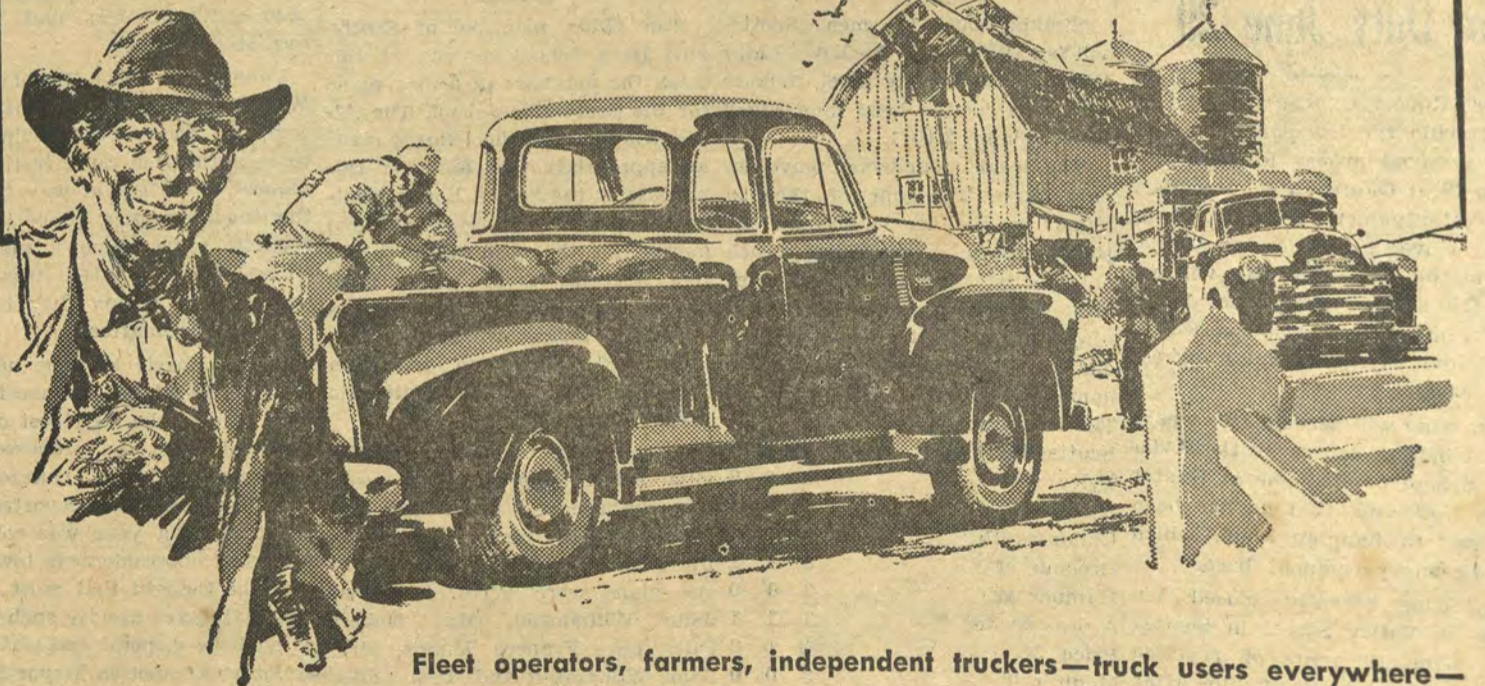

For every top-of-the-range job from a slow simmer to a high boil there's a heat that's scientifically right. You set the control and your electric range does the rest. Oven cooking is just as easy—just as accurate.

Why guess when you can be sure! Everyday 3123 families switch to electric cooking. You'll like it better, too—see your electric appliance dealer real soon.

Chevrolet trucks must be the best buy!

Fleet operators, farmers, independent truckers—truck users everywhere—buy more Chevrolets than any other make. There can be only one reason for that: Chevrolet trucks offer more of what you want.

As the official registration figures keep rolling in, they keep telling the same positive story about truck popularity and truck value: Again in 1953, for the twelfth straight production year, truck buyers show a clear-cut and decisive preference for Chevrolet trucks. If you're a truck user, this fact is mighty important to you. Why? Well, as you know, trucks are built and bought for just one reason—to do a job. So isn't it logical then that since Chevrolet trucks outsell all others, they must do a better job at lower cost?

That's why it will pay you to stop in and see us before you buy your next truck.

New Hog Grades Explained

With much talk about the new U. S. hog grading system, many farmers are wondering where they stand.

Market demand for leaner hogs should not be great cause for worry, but long feeders should study the situation.

Use of the new grades should result in better distribution of money paid for hogs—more money to the producer of properly finished hogs and less to the producer of undesirable over-fat hogs.

There will be no need to change breeds, but producers who want to hit top grades must make some changes in feeding and marketing. Hogs of any of the major breeds should qualify as Choice No. 1 if selection and feed and management practices are properly controlled.

What is the story behind the new grading system? Does it mean changing the present hog breed to the bacon breeds? What started it? Just what are these new grades anyway? These are the questions hog breeders and feeders would like answered.

The new grades are Choice No. 1, Choice No. 2, Choice No. 3, Medium, and Cull. They are aimed at providing a method of gauging true hog value in the light of present demands for pork products.

In recent years the four lean cuts (hams, loins, shoulders, and bacon) have brought far higher prices at the retail counter than fat backs, other fat cuts, and lard. At present, lard—packaged and refined—sells for less per pound than the weight cost of the hog from which it came.

To meet the shift in consumer preference for pork products, the methods of determining true hog value needed some overhauling. The new U. S. grades for slaughter hogs were developed to provide the needed change. They reflect both the ratio of lean to fat and the quality of the meat. The grades are available for use—on a voluntary basis—by producers and livestock market men. The U. S. Department of Agriculture provides no official grading service for live animals.

Choice No. 1 hogs are slaughter hogs with about the minimum finish required to produce high-quality pork cuts. Choice No. 2 hogs are slaughter hogs producing high-quality pork but slightly over-fat and yielding carcass cuts that need heavier trimmings. Choice No. 3 hogs that are decidedly over-fat.

They yield a low proportion of lean cuts and a high proportion of fat. Medium hogs are underfinished with under-firm meat.

Nitrogen Starvation Causes Corn Losses

Nitrogen starvation of corn costs Virginia farmers money every year. Agronomists at VPI say this starvation, which shows up in yellow color or firing of corn, can be avoided by side-dressing with nitrogen. "Firing up" of the lower leaves is the telltale of nitrogen starvation.

If enough nitrogen is used between now and the last cultivation to keep off the starvation signs through August, it will boost Virginia's corn yields by at least 15 to 20 bushels per acre.

The cost of the additional nitrogen is more than offset by increased yields. Two pounds of nitrogen, costing between 30c and 40c, usually will produce one bushel of corn. On a larger scale, 100 pounds of nitrogen fertilizer costing between $3 and $4 may be expected to produce 8 bushels of corn.

"No fired corn in August" should be the goal of every corn producer, the agronomists advise. By following that slogan, farmers can meet their present needs for corn on less acres. The land taken out of corn can be used for pasture and hay to feed livestock, and, at the same time, will reduce erosion caused by plowing steep land.

Soil Samples Advised for Pastures To Be Reseeded This Fall

Farmers who are planning early fall seeding of pastures and alfalfa are advised to have soil samples made now.

A soil sample will show whether or not lime is needed and will give an indication of the fertility level of phosphate and potash in the soil.

If lime is needed it can be applied before seeding. The pH for alfalfa should be 6.5 or above, and for pasture 6.0 to 6.5.

Soil boxes and soil record sheets for taking samples can be obtained from the county agent's office or other professional agricultural workers. Be sure to get a representative sample. Instructions are on the back of the soil record sheets. Read and follow them carefully.

One billion tons of manure, the animal product of livestock on U. S. farms, if completely recovered, carefully preserved, and efficiently used, could increase the value of crop production by $6,000,000,000. Are you properly handling the manure produced on your farm?

SUPREME COURT QUESTIONS WARN OF SCHOOL PROBLEM

Because of the splendid arguments presented to the Supreme Court last year by that great constitutional lawyer, John M. Davis, and several State Attorneys General, including J. Lindsay Almond, Jr. of Virginia, I was confident that the Court would uphold State school segregation laws.

I became concerned last week, however, when the Court announced that before deciding the pending school segregation case it wanted to hear further argument on whether the Congress which submitted the Fourteenth (equal right) Amendment and the State Legislatures and Conventions which ratified the Amendment believed it would abolish segregation in the schools. The Court also asked whether the framers of this Amendment believed Congress could use it to abolish segregation or wanted the Courts to have that power and whether the Court had the power to interpret the law to outlaw school segregation.

Previously I had felt those questions were fully and adequately answered by the arguments of Davis and the others who pointed out that after the adoption of the Amendment Congress had passed a law authorizing segregation in the District of Columbia and several states which voted to ratify the Amendment passed school segregation laws. Even the religious organizations which had sponsored the Fourteenth Amendment later established segregated schools for negroes in the South.

The fact that the Court has asked these questions is significant, however, especially since this was done on the same day that a decision was given upholding a "forgotten" law which makes it a criminal offense for restaurants in the District of Columbia to maintain racial barriers.

Virginia and other southern states have been doing everything within their financial power to comply with a previous decision of the Supreme Court requiring that equal facilities and opportunities for education be made available for all, regardless of race. But, if the Court goes further and declares that the facilities cannot be equal if they are separate and that segregation in the public schools must end, I fear that under the guise of promoting equal opportunity for the colored people of the South it will do them irreparable harm.

Colored leaders in Virginia and generally throughout the South realize that 90 percent or more of the cost of the public schools is paid by white people although in twenty Virginia counties and in some whole states there are as many colored pupils as there are white.

If the white parents in southern states, should refuse to patronize non-segregated public schools and

The School Trustee Electoral Board of Fluvanna County will meet in the School Board Room at the Fluvanna County High School on Monday, June 22, 1953 at 10.00 a.m. for the purpose of appointing a member of the Fluvanna County School Board for the Palmyra Magisterial District for a term of four years from July 1, 1953.

oppose the appropriation of adequate funds for public schools because their children are attending private schools the quality of public education will necessarily decrease and the loss will be suffered by white children of those who cannot afford more costly privately supported education, as well as by colored children.

Human nature has not greatly changed since the days of Thomas Jefferson when the rich planters of Virginia defeated his public school bill because of an unwillingness to be taxed for the education of the masses. It was 90 years later before we adopted the plan which Jefferson, as Governor, had recommended.

Ramblings

Well, they've practically done away with the steam engine, given away the whistles, and made the front end of even a freight train look long, sleek, powerful and glamorous as it rolls by, but when you sit at a railroad crossing and watch the interminable string of huge box cars, it is a gay and cheerful fillip to the whole performance when the little red and yellow caboose brings up the rear, following like the tail on a kite. In winter, smoke is cheerily pouring out the chimney, and you know by the light through the window that someone is in there, a human touch after watching all that machinery. In summer, the windows of the caboose are open, and the conductor waves as he goes by. We catch him much oftener than the engineer, who also waves, but is hard to see up there on his high throne.

In the summer thousands go to "the beach", meaning any seashore resort, for a vacation. They go to have fun, to relax, to keep cool. Yet sometimes a stretch of beach open all day to the glaring sun, and peopled with hundreds of running figures, the gaudy umbrellas and picnic paraphernalia, all add up to a day of hot confusion. Why not bring some of the relaxing qualities of the seashore into your home for the summer. We all have to paint the porch now and then, and spruce up the furniture. Sand color for the fiber rug, or the painted floor, colors of shell white, sky blue, the soft green of the sand dunes, the grey of bleached wood, are cooling choices for slipcovers, draperies and painted furniture.

Father's Day rolls around again on Sunday, and the same as we said on Mother's Day may be repeated about this business of having a special day to show the love and appreciation we should show in many ways all year. Fathers are apt to be less demonstrative in showing their devotion, but they give and give with never a thought of return. Let us give them at least a portion of our time and consideration this year, instead of just a present.

It has been said that the imprudent reflects on what he has said; the wise man on what he is going to say. What I'd like to say is a happy thought, but the best I can think of at the moment is a Happy Day to all you fathers!

Heard About the Electric Weather Predictor?

Squint Smith built up quite a reputation last month by predicting the weather. What he said usually came true.

It got so that folks would sit around his little Antique Shop just to get his opinion.

Last Monday, though, he said he didn't know what the weather was going to be like next day. That surprised us and when we asked what happened, Squint said, "Slipped up on my electric bill and was turned off. I'll get to my radio again tomorrow though." Squint had been getting the weather over the radio—just like anyone else!

From where I sit, that's the way it goes with some "experts." They often don't have any more inside information than you can get for yourself. Like those who "know" cider is the only thirst-quencher after a day's work. Far as I'm concerned, I'll take a temperate glass of beer. But—I won't try to "predict" your choice for you.
