J. Irving Maupin

"Mayor" Maupin Of Alberene Has Many Friends; Hard Worker In Community Projects

By Elizabeth Wimer

The little town of Alberene, between here and Schuyler, has known busier days, but right now, Alberene is known by many in this vicinity not so much as a mining town, but as the place where they can buy groceries and general merchandise from a man who has been a friend to all who come in contact with him.

His friends seldom call him by his given name, which is J. Irving Maupin. To most people he is "The Mayor". Not that he ever held political office in such a capacity, but the nickname, "Mayor" stuck to him after a group of friends tagged him with it on a trip. He wandered down the wrong set of steps in a Washington, D. C. railroad station some years ago, and had to retrace his steps to get to the train which was about to leave for home. As he came puffing up the platform, his friends who were waiting in the door of the train for him, shouted "Here comes the Mayor!" The train pulled out as soon as he was safely on board.

Mr. Maupin has been postmaster of Alberene for 22 years. He first came to Alberene 28 years ago to manage the commissary for the Alberene Stone Corporation before it moved its operations to Schuyler. After operations stopped in Alberene, Mr. Maupin took over the commissary, cut it in half, and started out with a post office and a cigar counter. Gradually he added to his merchandise until it is a one-stop shopping center which serves customers within a radius of more than 10 miles. During the last war, he endeared himself to many mothers in the vicinity by being able to supply them with canned milk when it was extremely scarce.

Free Union is Mr. Maupin's birthplace. He attended the Miller School for Boys and then served with the army medical corps at Columbus, Ohio during World War I. He told us that his camp there was located where President Theodore Roosevelt used to shoot duck.

Mrs. Maupin is the former Miss Rosalie Bruffey of Charlottesville. The Maupins have six children. They are Alvin R. Maupin and Wendell W. Maupin of Richmond, Mrs. Erma Levy of Norwood, N. C., Hollis W. Maupin of Jersey City, N. J., Mrs. Janice Callahan of Portsmouth and Giles Maupin of Lubbock Field, Texas, where he is stationed with the Air Force. They have 11 grandchildren. The "Mayor" likes nothing better than to get his hands on a fishing pole or a deer rifle. Hunting season finds him roaming the woods, mostly in Buckingham, and he is known as an expert huntsman. He has never failed to get a deer, and never lost a shot. "All luck," he remarked. And some hunters are so sure of this, they try to make a point of standing near him when shooting starts on opening day. The head of a 23-point, 165-pound deer is mounted on the wall of his store. He shot this one 15 minutes after hunting season started one year.

The largest fish Mr. Maupin ever caught was a 95-pound shark at Messick. He also recalled with pleasure an 11-pound rockfish at Twigs Ferry, one of his favorite spots. He is planning a three-day trip to Ocean City, Md., this week for a little deep-sea fishing. He has a trailer and an outboard motor included in his fishing equipment.

Although he has never been a real mayor, the "Mayor" takes a keen interest in political affairs. He is a member of the Democratic Committee of Albemarle County, and has been instrumental in obtaining improved roads and electricity around this part of the county. The road which leads to his store is paved, mostly through his efforts. In working on getting electricity installed in this area, he drew a map of the roads, residents, etc. for the power company to go by.

He is a member of the Alberene Baptist Church, Alberene Masonic Lodge 277, of which he has been Master about five times, and of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, which he joined when he was 18 years old.

Whether its seed, feed, a can of beans, a bottle of pop or just a friendly word to give you a boost, you'll find it at the "Mayor's" store.

County Farm Notes

By P. H. France

Keep Cattle Away from Grease, Oil—

It may be possible to reduce, or eliminate entirely, hyperkeratosis (X-disease) in cattle on many farms if they are kept away from tractors, combines, bulldozers, and other farm machinery where they may eat grease or oil.

That's the conclusion based on research conducted by 17 state agricultural Experiment Stations co-operating with the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

In Virginia, the work on X-disease was done by Dr. Wilson B. Bell, veterinarian, who last month announced that a highly chlorinated naphthalene found in certain lubricants was at least one of the causes of the malady which has puzzled researchers for several years.

Representatives from the various Experiment Stations said that used crank case oil, old oil drums and similar containers should be kept away from cattle; and drainage from around grease racks and in farm machinery sheds should not be allowed to contaminate lots of pastures to which cattle have access. They agreed that cattle may become affected with X-disease by exposure to, or eating, highly chlorinated naphthalenes contained in certain lubricants, or by unknown toxic ingredients in feedstuffs. The researchers have been able to produce the disease experimentally by giving the suspected feeds under controlled feeding tests in neighboring regions as well as in their own states. The disease has also been produced with particular batches of processed concentrates roofing asphalt and timothy hay from one certain field.

Findings of the work conducted thus far were discussed by the Experiment Station men at a meeting early this month at the University of Tennessee. States represented at the meeting were Tennessee, Georgia, New York, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Minnesota, Illinois, Wisconsin, Alabama, Michigan, Oklahoma, and Virginia.

Research will be continued to investigate other possible causes of X-disease and products that might contain toxic chemicals. Attempts will be made to develop methods of prevention and control. Seed Supply Outlook Seems Favorable—

Indications for a favorable seed supply for most crops in Virginia this year are seen by Dr. H. L. Dunton, head of the agronomy department at VPI.

Production of orchard grass seed this year in Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri (where most of the crop is produced) is forecast at 11,800,000 pounds of clean seed. This is four percent smaller than the large 1951 crop, but is 56 percent above the 1941-50 average. Therefore, supply should meet the demand.

There will be more of the improved strains of alfalfa, such as Buffalo, Atlantic, and Ranger. Certified Williamsburg, a promising strain developed by the VPI Agricultural Experiment Station will be available in limited quantities for seeding in the spring of 1953. Prices will be about the same as last year.

The red clover crop looks promising. There will be more Kenland, a variety which has superior resistance to anthracnose. The price will depend on the size of the crop.

As for other crops, Dr. Dunton sizes up the situation this way: Ladino—big carry-over and a good crop, prices much lower.

Crimson clover—supply promises to be adequate, prices a little lower.

Timothy—harvest about to begin, prices about the same as last year. Kentucky 31 fescue—much larger acreage, ample supply at lower prices.

Hairy winter vetch—plenty at lower prices.

Small grains—a good crop and favorable harvest, weather are good omens for an adequate supply of good quality seed wheat, oats, barley, and rye.

Wheat Mosaic Shows Up For First Time in State—

Wheat mosaic, a soil-borne disease which stunts plants and causes reddened and streaked leaves, showed up this spring for the first time on farms in Virginia.

The disease was identified this spring in eight counties—Amherst, Buckingham, Essex, Halifax, Henrico, Prince Edward, Richmond, and Westmoreland. It had formerly appeared only at the Arlington experimental farm.

The disease likely is present in the soil elsewhere, but has not shown up because resistant varieties have been planted. Infested soil remains so for at least eight years.

Susceptible varieties are Atlas 50, Atlas 66, and Nittany.

Farmers can control the disease by planting resistant varieties. These include Leap, Leapland, Thorne, VPI 131, and Vahart.

The disease plays havoc with yields. Diseased areas produce only 1-4 to 1-3 the yield on unaffected areas, and that the grain is of poor quality. Mosaic effects only winter wheat.

Watch susceptible varieties particularly, and if any suspicious symptoms are seen report them to me immediately.

Plans are to test several varieties, including both experimental and standard, on the farm of W. D. Edward, in Richmond County, for resistance to the disease.

Flower Lore

By Norma Todd-Davis

Tulip and Myrtle

The tulip is an Eastern flower. The Persians hold a tradition that the Tulip first sprang from the soil moistened with the blood of Furshock, the celebrated lover of Shereen. The tulip as well as the crown imperial, is the emblem of pride; though in Persia it is used to signify perfect love. When a young man presents one of these flowers to his mistress, he gives her to understand, by the general color of the flower, that he is on fire with her beauty; and by the black base of it, that his heart is burnt to a coal.

Mary Howitt has spoken of the tulip more gently than most of the poets.

'Streaky Tulip, jet and gold, Dearly priced whenever sold; Rich in color; low and sweet.'

The Myrtle was named from Myrsine, a Grecian female and priestess in the temple of Venus. She was a great favorite of Minerva; and Venus, as a proof of her own regard, changed her to a myrtle, which, at the same time, she decreed should be green and odoriferous throughout the year.

The myrtle is the emblem of love in absence, "The Myrtle bough bids lovers alive; But that Matilda will not give."—Scott

It was the custom of Greek warriors to wreath their swords with myrtle.

"O! not beneath the enfeebling withering glow of such dull luxury did those Myrtles grow, with which she wreathed her sword when she would dare immortal deeds." Moore

Norwegian miles are seven times as long as the American mile.

Clifford M. Holland engineered the Holland tunnel.

Morgan B. Jones
A graveside funeral service was held on Wednesday at 2:30 from the Community Cemetery at Arvon for Morgan Boatwright Jones who died in McGuire Hospital, in Richmond, Monday. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Nellie Bragg Jones, of Arvon; two brothers, Albert M. Jones, of Arlington, and R. M. Jones, of Charlottesville, a sister, Mrs. A. G. Morgan, and a nephew, Robert Ashby Jones, of USA, stationed at Greenville, Mississippi, and a brother-in-law, H. E. Cooke, of Howardsville.

When it's summer in California it's also summer in China.

Enjoy 80 hours of records Electrically...

for the cost of an ice cream soda
If you listened to records five hours a day every day for sixteen days—the cost of the electricity used would still be less than a 25¢ ice cream soda. More than ever electricity is the biggest bargain in your family budget. While the price of practically everything else has steadily gone up—electricity today is cheaper than it was 20 years ago. Progressive, economy-minded business management continually strives to make it even cheaper!

A Worthy Project

Within the next few weeks the Scottsville Lions Club is planning a "White Elephant Sale" to raise money for the Scottsville High School band. Although a definite date has not been set for the auction, members of the club have urged citizens to begin looking about their home for odds and ends to give for the sale.

Don't put off gathering up your articles. Start now getting them together for the auction. This is a worthy cause in which all can help.

The Fog May Clear

Some of the commentators have written that they don't expect General Eisenhower and Governor Stevenson to differ greatly on many of the campaign issues. This belief is predicated on the theory that both are by nature moderate, middle-of-the-road men who will shy away from both the right and the left.

That remains to be seen—both candidates have said that they mean to make a top issue out of foreign policy so they must believe that they have a real cleavage of opinion when it comes to that all-important matter. But it is a certainty, regardless of how much or little Eisenhower and Stevenson agree or disagree, that the Republicans will hit hard on two issues. One is that 20 years is more than enough for one party to hold power—that it must be turned out of office lock, stock and barrel if the government is to be cleansed, the corruption stopped, and the deadwood eliminated. The other is that Governor Stevenson is, to quote Senator Nixon, a "helpless captive of those who made his nomination possible," and "truly a hand-picked candidate . . . of Harry Truman."

These are very difficult charges to effectively answer, and Governor Stevenson obviously knows that in his acceptance speech he made a point of saying that the Democrats must not try to excuse or belaud corruption and wrong-doing but must thoroughly clean house themselves. He also said, in effect, that it is not necessary to burn the house down to clean it. It is doubtless true that the Governor's refusal to be a volunteer candidate, and his insistence on a draft if he was to run at all, stemmed from his strong desire to be disassociated from the personalities of the present Administration.

Even so, and in spite of Governor Stevenson's excellent record of honesty and integrity in administering the affairs of Illinois, he has a hard job ahead. No one believes that he would countenance corruption, whether it be of the mink-coat, deep-freeze type or something much greater. The Republicans will not attack him as an individual. But they can and will make a strong case to the effect that no Democrat would be able to effectively shake-up and change a machine that has been entrenching itself for 20 years. The machine, they will argue, would be stronger than the President, and he would be largely helpless no matter how good his intentions. They will thus argue that Governor Stevenson would bring in new faces at the top—but that he couldn't do much on lower levels where most government corruption is almost always found.

So it is quite likely that General Eisenhower's strongest talking point—unless the foreign policy debate is developed to where it overshadows everything else—will be in the nature of "turn the rascals out." He is excellently fitted for this role. His experience has been in the military field, where an honest egot is made to pick the best man for each job, regardless of pull or influence or friendship. In an imperfect world, that effort isn't always successful but it is the principle under which Eisenhower was trained.

On Labor Day the campaigns will swing into high gear. Then we'll begin to get the answers to many questions which are foggy now.

Country Lawyer

In his acceptance speech General Eisenhower proclaimed that he would lead a Freedom Crusade and many of us wondered just what he meant. Last week, he speaking at Boise, Idaho, gave us a kind of an explanation. He proclaimed what he called a "middle of the road" path.

He said "The great problem of America today is to take the straight road down the middle, the path of progress that will never allow tyranny to become the feature of American government." And he went on to denounce the centralization of power in Washington and said: "the government does everything but come in and wash the dishes for the housewife." We are still bewildered.

The problem that we face is clearly one of dependence versus independence. By the very nature of things man cannot be dependent and independent at one and the same time. Simple addition and subtraction enters this picture. As dependence is added independence is subtracted.

The drive of the Democrats has been to add dependence and subtract independence. At least that has been the drive since 1933 under what is called "liberalism" and a "New Deal" and a "Fair Deal." Those revolutionists in control of the Democrat party say, in effect, "depend on me". That is exactly the same cry that has been raised in every other "ism" in every other country where independence gave way to dependence and one-man rule resulted.

When General Eisenhower tells us that he wants to go down the middle of the road he is telling us that he wants to stand midway between dependence and independence. That is a strange place to stand. But at the same time it is a much more comfortable place to stand than is the position of Governor Stevenson. Despite any position he may affect he is so tightly bound up on the dependence side that he cannot escape it.

For that reason we are in the strange position of supporting General Eisenhower even though his nomination by the Republican Party was a very real disappointment. He will not give us the sharp division between dependence and independence we would have had with Senator Taft as the Republican nominee.

As the same time Senator John Sparkman is telling the people some foolishness. In his home town in Alabama he said: "Not one of you has lost one bit of your liberty. There is not one of you the federal government can tell what to do or when to do it" Surely the able Senator knows better than that. Or, perhaps, he has been too long in office and too long away from the burdens of the people. He has been in the House and in the State for sixteen years.

Perhaps the Senator does not know that our average standard is reduced by one-third through federal taxation. Perhaps he has never observed any of the great mass of questionnaires imposed on the people. Perhaps he has never seen how almost every relationship between men is controlled and directed out of Washington. Perhaps he knows nothing of the hundreds of thousands of federal agents roaming this land harassing the people and consuming their substance.

And perhaps the gentleman is unaware that the citizen is reduced to the point where there is no escape from government propaganda. One cannot mail a letter at my postoffice without participating in propaganda by proclaiming to the world that NATO represents peace, strength and freedom. The only three cent stamps available are those that carry that propaganda.

The citizen is not even safe in his home from government propaganda. Every time he tunes in his radio or television set he is interspersed with the propaganda. The tax money taken from him comes back to him in the form of picking and fiddling and singing interspersed with the propaganda gems of the various bureaus.

Senator Sparkman should tell us the truth. If he sees merit in the substitution of dependence for independence he should argue that merit. He should not try to say that there has been no loss of liberty in the already substantial loss of independence. It just isn't so.

What Do YOU See Inside This Door?

Looking at this familiar door, do you see the door to a public building? Do you see a place where the children can be left in September and forgotten until June? Or do you see more than that?

Using a little imagination, let's look again. Can you see the eager faces of hundreds of boys and girls? Now look even closer. Look into the minds of these children. What you see is the world of tomorrow, being shaped right here in our schools. Our children will run their world as they have learned in our schools.

Can our schools tackle this greatest job of our times? They can . . . IF

If our schools are financially able to operate as they should

If we support our schools and have faith in our teachers

If we—all of us—take an active part in the school life of our community.

Our schools in Scottsville are excellent. And as long as every one of us keeps working for better schools, this door will be a door to a brighter future for our world . . . and our children's world.

Garden Club Meets

The Fluvanna Garden Club met at "Greenwood," the home of Mrs. W. R. Cook, Sr., Thursday, August 21, with Mrs. R. B. Holber-ton as co-hostess. Mrs. W. J. Smith, president, who was unable to attend the last meeting because of a broken arm, presided and welcomed quite a number of visitors. Mrs. O. R. Lanford, bird chairman, read a very informative article on the red tail hawk, which she said was very rarely seen in this section.

Immediately after the business session the program chairman, Mrs. S. J. Loving, introduced the speaker, Mrs. A. D. Livesay, of Richmond. Mrs. Livesay gave an interesting talk on "Perennial Borders."

Among the many helpful suggestions she gave was that many perennials will continue to bloom over a much longer period if they are not allowed to form seed. She also said "playing with color in the perennial border is so much fun."

After her talk she showed pictures of the most interesting perennials for the border.
