Byrd Addresses Farm Bureau Meet

By Mary Alice Ankers, Publicity Chairman

Fluvanna County FARM BUREAU was host Friday night June 6, to many members of neighboring counties and local citizens. The regular bi-monthly meeting, held at Carysbrook High School, was ushered into a jovial mood by numerous band numbers by the Fluvanna High School Band, directed by Captain Reton Edgerton. After speeches of welcome were made by President George Glenn and Program Chairman Kent Lovington, Supt. of Schools J. P. Snead introduced the main speaker of the evening, U. S. Senator Harry F. Byrd.

Senator Byrd found a responsive audience to his remarks in a speech as non-political as possible five weeks before an election. The senator confirmed his interests in farming affairs, telling of his early start at sixteen as an apple sprayer, and rising to the annual export of 1500 carloads of apples, "and not one bushel sold to Uncle Sam". Byrd praised the outstanding work of Alan Cline as president of American Farm Bureau in his representation in Congress, especially fighting the Brennan Plan. Byrd stated the foresighted need of the farmers as being: one, roads to take products to market, and two, a low tax rate. He reviewed how through the years as governor of the state he had proposed the pay-as-you-go plan for road improvement, thereby taking Virginia out of the mud without a bond issue, by a gasoline tax. He also stated his senatorial insistence of conservative ideas and boosting the R.E.A. and soil conservation programs, together with maintaining the second lowest tax rate in the United States.

With the above practices of security and betterment for the farmers, interests, Byrd sounded the alarm of threats from without, as Russia, who holds the time-tables and maps for warfare. He summed up the urgency of an impregnable national defense by a reasonable army, large navy, and superior air force. He also sounded a piercing note of dangers within our own country's borders, as too much governmental subsidizing and eventual directorship of agricultural production where "power follows the purse." He spoke of impending national bankruptcy unless a plan is presented and rigidly adopted for cutting governmental expenditures and indebtedness, and ended with a strong plea for preservation of our financial integrity and national freedom.

SACRED MUSICAL AT COLUMBIA CHURCH

A program of instrumental music will be presented Sunday evening June 22, at 8 P.M. at the Memorial Baptist Church, Columbia. Performers will be Miss Mildred Proffitt, pianist, Miss Mary Alice Ankers, organist and Mrs. Margaret Ankers, Gilkey, vibraharpist. The public is cordially invited, and a silver offering will be taken to assist in the erection of a belfry and church bell. Rev. Burke Crowder will speak briefly in honor of the 110th anniversary of Memorial Church.

Both J. T. Henley, chairman of the board, and Paul Cale, superintendent of county schools, assured the Scottsville group that the board expects to get to work on the Scottsville plans "just as soon as the consolidated school is completed."

After a discussion of about half an hour between members of the board and the local delegation, Hugh Flynn, principal spokesman for the Scottsville group, said that he felt that the meeting had helped clear up the matter considerably and that he and the others were "glad to know the school board is considering the Scottsville school" despite the fact that the plans outlined were not too definite.

Mr. Flynn, heading the delegation composed of PTA and Lions Club members and others interested, opened the questioning by asking what plans the school board had for the Scottsville school and how soon the board expects to get started on them.

He was told that the board plans definite building improvements the year after the consolidated high school is completed and that although the curriculum at the local school will not be as varied as that of the consolidated school, it will be as good as can be offered with a limited enrollment.

R. E. Brill, member of the delegation asserted that "we have heard a lot about accredited high schools and we definitely want Scottsville to be an accredited school."

Mr. Cale answered that accreditation under new standards is not to emphasize as much the number of enrollment as the number of subjects offered. Accredited schools must have as many as 30 subjects offered, he said, in a four-year course. Subjects may be altered to meet these requirements. Scottsville had 34 courses offered this year and he could see no problem of accreditation unless there was a great drop in enrollment, he said.

Two courses in fine arts are required for accreditation and the school board hopes to set these up in the near future, he said.

George Omohundro, Jr., asked if public transportation wouldn't determine the number of enrollment. Mr. Cale answered: "Yes. The board is faced with the decision of whether Scottsville has the right to have a school. Other communities might also want the right to decide where their children go."

Here Mr. Henley broke in to say that the decision of where the children go will be left to the communities.

Mr. Omohundro pointed out that if there is too much delay in improving the Scottsville schools, pupils may be attracted to other schools.

Mrs. W. A. Dawson, wife of the former school board member from Scottsville, wanted to know if it will be possible for architects to complete supervision on the consolidated schools and get to work immediately on plans for the Scottsville school.

Both Mr. Henley and Mr. Cale said yes.

HOUSE BURNS

"Chestnut Ridge", 200 year old frame house near the Garth Road, Charlottesville burned to the ground last Wednesday night, ten days before its new owners were to move in.

Mrs. Haden Named Library President

Mrs. Wesley Haden, of Kent's Store, was elected president of the Advisory Committee of the Fluvanna Public Library Demonstration Tuesday afternoon at the organization meeting of that group at the Charlottesville — Albemarle Public Library.

Miss Christine Coffey, assistant extension librarian of the Virginia State Library, presided at the session which was attended by members of the Charlottesville Library's board of trustees and representatives from Fluvanna.

Miss Coffey explained the interest and sponsorship of the Virginia State Library in the Demonstrations. The Charlottesville-Albemarle Public Library, as agent of the Virginia State Library, is making library service available in Fluvanna County through its bookmobile and by opening the main library to Fluvanna residents without cost. The entire expense of operation is being borne by the State Library to the amount of $7,121. The demonstration period will extend until June 30, 1953, at which time Fluvanna County may join the Charlottesville-Albemarle Library System on a contributing basis.

Mrs. Haden, the new president, is the person who was initially interested in obtaining library service for Fluvanna. Daniel H. Healey, director of the Charlottesville library, was elected secretary of the body.

Other business included a discussion of possible bookmobile routes and schedules for Fluvanna, and a decision to hold regular meetings on the Second Tuesday of each month at the clerk's office in Palmyra.

Homen Walsh welcomed the members of the committee to the local library. He is chairman of its board. He also invited members of the Committee to attend meetings of the board during the demonstration period.

Fluvanna representatives present in addition to Mrs. Haden, were Mrs. Asa Haden and the Rev. Eugene Rawlings, of Palmyra. Members of the Advisory Committee who were unable to be present are: Mrs. Royce Collins, of Scottsville; Mrs. Henry Davis, Fork Union; and Captain J. A. Hughes, Palmyra.

Charlottesville-Albemarle Public Library board of trustees who were present were: Mr. Walsh, George B. Zehmer, J. Emmett Gleason, and Dr. Cuthbert Tunstall, Mr. Healey, library director, was also present.

4-H Club Picnic

The Point-of-Fork- 4-H Club was invited to a fish fry given by the Home Demonstration Club at the home of Miss Alice Ankers at Columbia. The women had their meeting before school was out so the children could get together after school and have their meeting. They played games of soft ball, basketball, and others. The parents of the children arrived around 5:45 then they had a very appetizing meal, fish, potato chips, apple sauce deviled eggs, lettuce, slaw, bread and other delicious things to eat. Each family brought the dish they ate with fish so there was a variety of different dishes.

After the meal they had entertainment by the 4-H girls. They had three skits, "Gypsies," "The Favor" and "Playing Hospital". The actor in one play was unable to be there so Mary Frances Himan took her part.

When the skits were over they gathered around in the living room while Miss Ankers played the piano. Hymns were sung until 9:30 p. m. then Rev. Crowder the Baptist Minister from Columbia dismissed the group with a prayer.

There were around fifty-seven members present.

Household Hints

By Betty J. Minnick, Home Economist Appalachian Electric Power Company

Now is the time that families are taking their vacations and two problems always face the homemaker at the last minute. What shall I do to keep my household equipment in good working order and, secondly, what equipment for convenience or pleasure should be taken during the vacation?

Following is a list of things to do before leaving the house or apartment so that you may enjoy the looked-for vacation:

1. Clean the refrigerator. Be sure to remove all odds and ends that will not keep. If your vacation is to be a long one, turn your refrigerator control to a warmer setting to that it will remain in operation and yet will not use unnecessary current. If the freezer contains any frozen food, it must be left in the normal setting.

If you plan on being away for the entire summer, you may want to completely disconnect the refrigerator. If this is true, it is very important that you thoroughly defrost and clean the refrigerator, leaving it dry inside and out. Leave the door slightly open to prevent a musty odor from forming.

When you return, it is best to wash the refrigerator out again, connect the cord to the wall outlet and allow the refrigerator to operate for at least two hours before placing food in it or trying to make ice cubes.

2. Check the range to be sure that all units are turned off. Clean the range.
3. Clear the pantry of all open food. Better take a look in the bread box, too!

4. Turn all water faucets off. See that the kitchen sink drain is left open.

5. Disconnect all small appliances such as toasters, irons, clocks, etc.

6. Empty all garbage and waste baskets.

Outside of the kitchen you should check:

1. Extension cords to be sure they are disconnected.

2. Bathroom faucets and shower.

3. All wastebaskets and ash trays.

4. House plants to see that someone will take care of them for you while you are gone.

5. Close and lock all windows.

6. Make arrangements for mail so that it won't overflow the mail box.

7. Leave a key with someone in case there may be a need for entering the house. Also, it may be wise for the house to be checked every once in a while.

8. Notify the milkman, the laundry man and the paper boy of your coming absence.

9. You may desire that your garden or lawn will not suffer from lack of care. Perhaps a friend will take care of it, particularly if he or she is extended garden privileges.

Now, is your house in good order? Have you turned off the refrigerator, cleaned it, stopped milk delivery, notified the man, cancelled the paper? Gather up everyone who is going and I certainly hope you a swell vacation!

Ramblings

The first wave of summer descended upon us this week the usual reactions followed. I say that almost all the wars of history started during the summer months, when high temperatures made tempers short and warring spirits were on the loose. People seem to become excited, irritable, and unreasonably placid and lazy, or unreasonably cantankerous during a hot summer. But June heat isn't even as aggravating as it is later in the season, and altogether, I think it is one of the nicest months of the year. For one thing, the June-Moon songwriters, really does seem to have an exceptional beauty. It is amazing how even a commonplace field of hay or one's own backyard can become something strange and mysterious under the transformation of moonlight. Silhouettes, shadows, and wide white patches of clear light magically turn our daylight surroundings into a place of beauty.

Our Allies Must Help

Once again the West and Russia have come to a crisis in the not-so-cool "cold war." It is, perhaps, the most serious crisis yet, and what ultimately results from it will have a tremendous influence on the future of all the world—communist and anti-communist.

The Bonn peace treaty, which is to pave the way for the restoration of full national sovereignty to West Germany, was an essential and risky step in the huge task of unifying the Western powers. So was the signing of the six-nation military pact, which followed at Paris immediately after the Bonn meeting. It was inevitable that Russia would oppose these acts with every resource at her command, short of war. The great question is whether, if means short of war are not enough, Russia will go the whole way. Those who are in the best position to know think she will not. But such opinions can only be educated guesses and time will provide the right and final answer.

In any event, Russia's strategy now is to prevent, if she can, the ratification of the peace treaty by the respective parliaments. And to forward this strategy she is using her familiar techniques.

A no-man's line was at once set up in East Germany, whose government is as responsive to the Kremlin as Charlie McCarthy is to Edgar Bergen. Telephone and telegraph lines between West Berlin and Western Germany were cut. Very severe new travel restrictions between the east and west zones were imposed. In short, a partial blockade was clamped down, bringing back memories of the days when only the amazing American air lift saved West Berlin from starvation and capitulation.

If these moves are not a preparatory step to war, they can have only one main significance: to create fear, to make it seem to people that the Soviet might is overwhelming and that safety lies in acquiescence to Soviet policies, to break down confidence that a really powerful Western alliance, with all the troops and planes and weapons that security demands, can be brought to fruition.

Now the problem is whether this strategy will succeed. Russia has effective tools to work with. A great many West Germans are against the peace treaty for one reason or another, and there will be strong opposition in their parliament when it is offered for ratification. France deeply fears the possibility of German rearmament—history has taught her what that could mean. This will be a big factor when the French parliament considers the treaty. And in both France and West Germany there are strong, tautly-disciplined communist groups which are trained to the hilt in the techniques of creating dissension and disorder.

On the credit side is the fact that the treaty, after long months of arduous preparation, has been signed at Bonn by the responsible representatives of the governments concerned, and so has the implementing military pact. We must now wait to see how far the Russians are ready to go. In the meantime, a view which is very widely held in this country was well-expressed by the Portland Oregonian, when it said, "Our own course must be strong and consistent, and we must demand that our European Allies fulfill their agreement to the letter."

Country Lawyer

Under our system as it developed persons accused of crime were tried and, if convicted, were sentenced in court to such punishment as might be determined and fixed by the Court. That is the right way. The jury which hears the evidence determines the punishment in Virginia. But that no longer holds true.

We now have what we call the Parole Board. This is composed of appointees selected by the Governor. Though the Jury which heard the case may have fixed the punishment to fit the crime the Parole Board thereafter steps into the picture and substitutes its judgment for that of the jury.

Except that persons sentenced to life imprisonment may not be paroled the law provides that felons "shall be eligible for parole after serving one-fourth of the term of imprisonment imposed, or after serving twelve consecutive years of imprisonment imposed if one-fourth of the term of imprisonment imposed is more than twelve years."

As a result there is often confusion in the Courts and among juries. It is natural for the jury to consider the matter of parole when thinking of the sentence that may fit the crime. And this happens very often.

This very thing happened in the Circuit Court of Northumberland County last week. A man was on trial for murder. The jury, after about 2½ hours of deliberation came into the Court to ask advice. The Foreman stated that the jury had agreed upon a verdict of murder in the first degree and wanted him to serve thirty years and wanted to know about the parole law. After the Judge had instructed them that they could not consider possibility of parole the jury returned to their room and in a few minutes returned with a sentence of sixty years.

In this case it clearly appeared that the jury, in fixing the punishment, took into consideration the possibility of parole. That is the natural result of our parole system.

After all it is difficult to justify this parole system. The sentence of the jury is the unanimous judgment of twelve persons who have heard the evidence in a judicial proceeding. That another group functioning through the process of bureaucracy and without direct knowledge of the crime should then substitute its judgment for that of the jury, hardly seems right.

A jury may, after careful deliberation, determine that a term of twenty years imprisonment is proper. Yet the person so sentenced may be back home again in five years. There is just no way by which a jury can impose a sentence of twenty years and have it carried out. Even imposition of eighty years would not assure that the person so sentenced would serve more than twelve years.

This situation naturally results in tremendous confusion as well as in injustice. Imposition of a sentence is a matter of grave responsibility. It is a problem addressed to the sound discretion of reasonable men and to be exercised with full recognition of the responsibility. The only matters that should be considered is the nature of the crime as presented to the jury in the evidence. The jury should consider the crime and the punishment that should fit that crime.

It is not fair to the public or to the accused to put the jury in the position of trying to out-guess what the intervening parole board may do. That is hardly justice.

In this particular case the accused would have 7½ years to serve had the jury imposed the thirty-year penalty. Having imposed the sixty-year penalty the accused may be paroled in twelve years.

It is all very well for us to talk about reforming prisoners and turning them back into society but the system, as now applied, is no more than that bureaucracy substitutes its judgement for that of the judicial tribunals. No man should be sentenced to a longer term than is warranted by the crime for which he is convicted and as determined by the jury. Nor should the punishment of any man be less than that determined by the jury.

The accused is properly entitled to trial by a jury of his peers and should get and accept the punishment meted out by that jury. Both the public and the accused are entitled to just that.

GRADES BROUGHT FEASIBLE PREMIUMS FEEDER CALF SALES

Fancy and choice grade feeder calves brought sizable premiums in recent sales in Virginia in 1951.

A study of price-grade relationships showed that the fancy and choice animals averaged 107 percent of prices for good grade, while prices for medium and common grade calves averaged only 94 percent and 80 percent respectively, of prices paid for good grade calves, says J. D. Johnson, agricultural economist at the Virginia Experiment Station at VPI.

The 10,392 calves sold were graded as follows: fancy and choice, 47 percent; good, 35 percent; medium, 17 percent; and common, 1 percent.

An analysis of prices paid for 2,182 beef-type yearling steers showed that price differences between grades showed a price pattern similar to that for feeder calves. Fancy and choice steer prices for medium grade steers averaged only 95 percent of good grade prices.

A comparison of yearling steer prices to steer feeder calf prices of the same grade in the same area on the same date, showed that feeder calf prices averaged $6.00 per hundredweight higher than yearling steer prices.

A similar study at 5 leading southwestern Virginia lamb markets, and 5 valley and northern Virginia lamb markets showed that seasonal price peaks occur during the latter part of May and the first part of June and again during the latter part of August and in September. Price differences between the two top grades of lambs widened as the season progressed. The gap also tended to widen as the proportion of lambs in the top grade diminished.

Johnson explains that buyers of ghter animals depend mainly on their estimate of dressing percentage (pounds of meat the animal will dress-out), and the grade of the meat. The yield determines how many pounds he will have to sell, and the grade tells him the maximum price he can charge under OPS.

If the animals have been properly graded according to standards understood and accepted by both buyer and seller, when assuming keen competition, the price finally paid will be more satisfactory to them both, Johnson says.

Much grading is done by livestock graders of the State Division of Markets. They are available on a fee basis to producers and marketers in request. Official grading of calves and lambs is done at the Virginia's auction market. All calves sold in the feeder calf sales are graded by these men.

STARTER SOLUTION AID FOR GARDENERS

Gardeners can give their vegetable plants a boost at transplanting time by using a starter fertilizer in the water.

L. C. Beamer, vegetable gardening specialist at VPI, says a starter solution is particularly valuable when planting tomatoes, peppers and eggplants.

Gardeners have a choice of several commercial materials, which should be used according to manufacturers' directions. If these commercial preparations are not available, a satisfactory solution may be prepared by mixing one-half pint of good garden fertilizer in 12 quarts of water.

Stir the mixture until its dissolved, and it's ready to use. After you dig the hole for the plant, pour in one cupful of the starter solution. Then set the plant, fill in the soil, and firm gently. In dry weather, the solution may not give as good results as in cool rainy weather, and Beamer warns that it is not recommended for late transplanting during hot weather.

CLEAN EGGS UP PROFITS

Produce clean eggs! That's good advice for any poultryman, and particularly those who are feeling an egg price-feed cost squeeze, says Dr. Robert Krueger, poultry marketing specialist at VPI.

Dr. Krueger says eggs which have the internal characteristics of Grade A, but have soiled shell usually sold as grade C. This may mean a decrease of as much as one-third in the price paid producers.

Here are some suggestions: Build nests 15 inches high with a 7-to 8-inch board along the front to keep nesting material inside.

Fill nests with 4 to 5 inches of fine, clean, absorbent material, such as shavings, oats, buckwheat, peanut hulls or cut straw. Add nest material as needed.

Allow one square foot of nest space to 5 or 6 hens.

Pick up eggs three times a day. Frequent gathering will reduce the possibility of eggs being soiled or broken. Since most eggs are laid early in the morning, it is a good idea to make the first pick-up between 9 and 10 a. m. The second and third gathering should be at noon and at 5 p. m.

Keep floors dry. Prevent wet floor litter by ventilating properly, keeping storms from blowing in open windows, and using guards over drinking fountains.

Dr. Krueger says in spite of all that can be done, about 10 percent of the eggs produced still need cleaning. Only slightly soiled eggs may be cleaned with some sort of an abrasive such as emery cloth or buffer. Rub only the soiled area, and scrub only as long as necessary to remove the spot.

Place badly soiled eggs in a wire basket. Let warm water from a faucet flow over the palm of your hand and sprinkle the eggs until all are wet. Move the basket from under the faucet and rinse off any remaining dirt by holding each egg under running water. Place the eggs in a separate basket to dry. Never leave eggs in water to soak.

How beautiful is night! After waiting with impatience each year for seeds to turn to full-grown flowers clear into the middle of the summer, I have found a much bigger thrill. In searching for appropriate greens, such as mountain laurel, and spotting blueberry bushes for future visiting when the berries are ripe, I have discovered occasional spots in the woods hereabouts where apparently "tame" flower seeds have blown and flourished. I can now transplant full-fledged hollyhocks, marigolds, violets, as well as rhododendron and laurel, which have so far grown in spite of transplanting. It is much more fun than buying the plants from a nursery, and as long as the plants are not forbidden because of their rarity (and disapproved for transplanting or picking by the Meanderer or by the owner of the woods) you can dig up a couple whenever you find something that would fit in your garden scheme. This way, you never know what you'll end up with, but the garden will be full of reminders of some pleasant treasure hunts.

Rambling from the woods to the city, we heard the following conversation some time back in the elevator of a large office building. We were approaching the top floor, when a nervous lady asked the elevator operator, "If the cables broke, would we go up, or down?"

"My dear lady," replied the man, "that would depend entirely on the kind of life you're leading."
